ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editors and authors gratefully acknowledge The Research Council of Norway (grant no. 233975/H20), Oslo Metropolitan University (OsloMet) and the Högskolestiftelsen i Österbotten Foundation for the funding that made this book, and the research it builds on, possible. A special thank you to Berit Berg Tjørhom, coordinator of the Societal Security and Safety programme (SAMRISK II) of The Research Council of Norway. We also wish to thank Senior Adviser Vibeke Helén Moe at the Department of Research and Development (OsloMet) for her helpful advice and encouraging support when we developed the research application for the RESCUE project.

We thank our interviewees, whether public authorities, crisis communicators in rescue organisations or journalists, for sharing their experiences and lessons learned using social media in risks and crises. Special appreciation goes to the interviewed victims who survived the Utøya tragedy in Norway for sharing their thoughts on how they used social media to cope with the trauma.

We thank our RESCUE project Advisory Board members for their valuable input during the process: Hildegunn Fallang (Political Advisor, survivor of the Utøya terrorist attack), Kristina Brekke Jørgensen (former Communication Advisor, Directorate of Civil Protection and Emergency Planning, Norway), Henriette Magnussen (Communication Advisor, Directorate of Civil Protection and Emergency Planning, Norway), Hannu-Pekka Laiho (former Communications Director, Finnish Red Cross), Thomas Meier (Head of Public Relations, State Fire Brigade Association in Styria, Austria), Werner Müllner (Deputy Editor in Chief and CIO, Austrian Press Agency), Odd Einar Olsen (Professor of Crisis Management, University of Stavanger, Norway), Nick Phin (Deputy Director for National Infection Service, Public Health England), Annette Rinne (Communications Director, Regional State Administrative Agency in Western and Mid-Finland) and Ingeborg Volan (former Head of Social Media, Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation).

Finally, we are grateful to our Language Editor, Mark Palmer, and to our Publisher Jen McCall and our Editorial Assistant Rachel Ward for guiding the project through to publication.

The ebook edition of this title is Open Access and is freely available to read online.
